Cash Vans Armed Vehicles

Cash Vans Armed Vehicles

An armored car (or armored cash transport car, security van) is an armored van or truck, used in transporting valuables, such as large quantities of money (especially for banks or retail companies). The armored car is typically a multifunctional vehicle designed to protect and ensure the well being of the transported individuals and/or contents. Often, armored cars are bulletproof and can withstand extreme degrees of heat. These vehicles are mostly utilized by the military, but many companies such as Mercedes, Lexus, Toyota, Cadillac, Audi, and BMW have created armored cars for civilian use, usually to protect valuables and dignitaries. Armored cars have an armored shell and cab, and typically are customized on a basic van or truck chassis. These vehicles are designed to resist attempts at robbery and hijacking. Bullet-resistant glass and reinforced shells and cabs are designed to resist bullets from most handguns and rifles. They may or may not be manned by armed guards. Such armored cars are usually operated by security firms, and are therefore often referred to as "security vans"

Event Security

Event Security

A security event is a change in the everyday operations of a network or information technology service indicating that a security policy may have been violated or a security safeguard may have failed. In a computing context, events include any identifiable occurrence that has significance for system hardware or software. Security events are those that may have significance to the security of systems or data. The first indication of an event may come from a software-defined alert or by end users notifying a help desk that, for example, network services have slowed down. As a rule, an event is a relatively minor occurrence or situation that can be resolved fairly easily and events that require an IT administrator to take action are classified as incidents. A help desk ticket from a single user reporting that they think they have contracted a virus is a security event, because it could indicate a security issue. If evidence of the virus is found on the user's computer, however, it can be considered a security incident.

Housekeeping Services

Housekeeping refers to the management of duties and chores involved in the running of a household, such as cleaning, cooking, home maintenance, shopping, laundry and bill pay. These tasks may be performed by any of the household members, or by other persons hired to perform these tasks. The term is also used to refer to the money allocated for such use. By extension, an office or organization, as well as the maintenance of computer storage systems.

A housekeeper is a person employed to manage a household, and the domestic staff. According to the Victorian Era Mrs Beeton's Book of Household Management, the housekeeper is second in command in the house and "except in large establishments, where there is a house steward, the housekeeper must consider his/herself as the immediate representative of her mistress"
